

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Load demands in a power system are managed by determining whether load demands on one or more power system components need to be varied. If the load demands need to be varied, new load demands to be placed on the power system components are determined. The 5 load demands on the power system components are controlled such that the load demands are substantially equal to the new load demands.